Remarks.--Indianapolis is the grand centre of a very extensive system of internal communication, and which, on its completion, will connect her either directly or indirectly with the most important places in the Eastern, as well as the Western States. For this she is in a great measure indebted to her geographical position, being situated in the centre of the State of which she is the capital. (By referring to the Map this will be made more apparent.) Indianapolis is, also, on the great high road from the East, via Pittsburg and Wheeling, to St. Louis, and will become more closely connected with the great marts of trade, by the construction of the Indianapolis and Bellefontaine Railroad, which, at the latter place, will unite with the Ohio and Pennsylvania Railroad. These will intersect, in their course, the various routes pervading the growing State of Ohio, which are destined to be numerous. Its route will be nearly central, and will connect with routes to Philadelphia, via Pittsburg; to Baltimore, via Wheeling and Cumberland; to ...
